NATIONAL THANKSGIVING

By the President of the United States of America.
PROCLAMATIONS.—While the American people should every day remember with prayer and thanksgiving the divine goodness and mercy which have favored them since their landing as a nation, it is fitting that one day in each year should be especially devoted to the contemplation of the blessings we have received from the hand of God and to the grateful acknowledgment of his loving kindness. Therefore, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby designate and set apart Thursday, the 30th day of the present month, November, as a day of thanksgiving and praise, to be kept and observed by all people in our land.

On that day, let us pause our ordinary work and employments, and ascribe in our hearts all praise to God, and let us remember that all that we have done for us, and where from grateful hearts our united tribute of praise and song may reach the throne of grace. Let the rejoicing of kindred and social meeting with friends and cheer and enjoyment to the relief of the poor and needy prove the abundantly of our thanksgiving. GROVER CLEVELAND.

THE PROBABILITIES.

It appears that the New York Herald is responsible for the "news" about "Cleveland and his Hawaiian plans" which was cabled to the Auckland press. Our readers will recall the fact that this paper, in speaking of the Reuter telegram when it came to hand, said that it might have been clipped from the Herald's "variegated and contradictory columns." That appears to have been the case, and the report ought not, therefore, to have fooled anyone. It certainly did not deceive the Associated Press, which, in telegrams to the Coast, embracing other parts of the Herald's correspondence, omitted the restoration paragraph.

It is but a little time ago that the Washington bureau of the Herald announced that Blount had not recommended that the Queen be restored, and that Cleveland would not put her back even if he had done so. The paper has changed its evidence with every change of the wind and cannot, therefore, be regarded as consistent, reliable or well-informed. We dismiss it as an incompetent witness, and return the question of Hawaii's future to the field of probability.

The restoration of the old order of things would be to reverse the general American doctrine, of late applied to Brazil, that the Western hemisphere ought to be controlled by a democracy. The United States gave moral aid to the Spanish-American countries in their revolt against the crown of Spain. They were the first to recognize those rebel colonies as independent States. In the case of Mexico, General Sheridan and 50,000 men were sent to the Rio Grande border in 1865 to menace Maximilian for the good of the Mexican republicans. To-day we find President Cleveland taking measures to head off the monarchist movement in Brazil. Is it to be supposed that the boom of sympathy so fairly yielded to the Latin democrats in South America by Democratic and Republican Presidents alike is to be denied to men of American birth and descent in Hawaii, and not only denied them but granted, in the form of military support, to the adherents of a corrupt and tyrannical monarchy?

Then what is to be said about the historic policy of the United States towards these Islands? That policy has always had two features: The encouragement and defence of American interests and the ultimate annexation of the group. Can anyone believe now, when American interests are almost solidly arrayed against Hawaiian royalty and have overthrown it, and when annexation can be brought about with the concurrence of the government in power, that Mr. Cleveland is going to assault those American interests for the sake of putting back the annexation movement perhaps for a decade? Are we to find him a Royalist here and a Democrat everywhere else?

There are, of course, other probabilities. Is it to be assumed that America would wage war on a friendly government to make up for an alleged insurrection of its own minister? Are we to have the repeated recognition of the Provisional Government annulled that a Queen who trampled on the constitution might be given another chance to do so? These things seem impossible when viewed from any standpoint of American or international sanity.

Whatever may be said by unfriendly and unreliable prints in the United States, we cannot but have faith that the American cause here will not suffer harm and shame at the hands of the American authorities.

The Advertiser, in its domain of amateur journalism, has been exposing the thrilling fact that a small part of the text of some official proceedings was the same in the STAR as in the morning print. Undoubtedly that is true, and hence we renew to the Advertiser the permission to lift official proceedings and other reports from these pages as freely in the future as it has done in the past. Nor need it take the trouble, when gleaming news from us, to make even such minor alterations as are seen in the second paragraph below:

Jim Brown will do ten days' hard labor for assaulting James Donovan with a bottle.—Advertiser, 21st.

The fact is that the STAR has been supplying the morning paper with the best part of its news for so these many months and has never mentioned the matter before. Suppose we begin now and enumerate these gifts of grace and count our scoops withal? Are you ready, Ancient?

SHADE OF JAMUS! The leader in the Advertiser this morning was in joyful approval of the sentiments expressed by Minister Willis to the STAR. Some of his sayings were quoted in the language of our reporter, others were referred to, and all were made the text of congratulation. And yet these things were denounced but a day or two ago as false and slanderous. "Can such things be and overcome us like a summer cloud without our special wonder?"

OUTLAW AFTER OUTLAW.

HOW MARSHAL GARD WILL HUNT APACHE KID.

With the Aid of a Mysterious Fugitive From Justice He Will Lay an Ambush for the Indian.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 5. — United States Marshal Gard of Los Angeles is going to try to round up Kid the Apache. Gard has been a tolerably successful man-hunter in his time, having taken a conspicuous part in the capture of Evans and Sontag and many other noted criminals, although his adventure with the Tulare desperadoes is the longest feather in his official cap to date. Gard was born in Missouri forty-eight years ago, fought through the civil war, came to California and was a member of the San Francisco Fire Department, became policeman, detective and Sheriff in Los Angeles and was appointed United States Marshal by ex-President Harrison. He has hunted horse-thieves, burglars and train-robbers and trailed Indians, and thinks he can bring the much-wanted Kid into camp. He proposes to adopt tactics similar to those which proved successful in the Sontag and Evans case—instead of actually hunting Kid he will let Kid hunt him. He will go into ambush in some pass of the mountains of Southern Arizona and wait until the Indian falls into his trap.

In speaking of his plan Marshal Gard has this to say when he was up from Los Angeles last week:

"I have contemplated making an effort to take Kid for a long time, and have been laying my plans. The reward offered for his capture is not altogether my incentive. I wished to rid the people of the Southwest of a pest. But there is a reward of $5000 offered by the Territory of Arizona for Kid's apprehension. There is another reward offered by New Mexico, and still another by the Government. In all there is at least $10,000 awaiting the man who brings the renegade in dead or alive.

"I have been in constant correspondence with General McCook in regard to my plans. He is, at present, head of the Department of the Colorado, which includes Arizona and New Mexico. He has known of my intention from the first and has offered to assist me in any possible way.

"I fully appreciate the dangers of campaign. I know Kid's character. I know the country in which my attempt will be made. I have figured on all the obstacles and believe that I can overcome them.

"I never thought that Lieutenant Wallace and his troops, nor any other large squad of men, would capture Kid. A criminal who knew nothing about that wild country would find little trouble in evading a posse.

"In preparing for my campaign I have been very careful in the selection of my men. I wanted but two. I wished one who knew the country thoroughly. I wished another man who knew Kid. I did not care to take chances on killing an Indian who was not the right one. I have got just the two men I want for my undertaking. I shall not tell yet who they are.

"One of them knows all that part of southeastern Arizona lying south of the San Francisco mountains. He has lived down there and has prospected and scouted all over that country. He knows, too, the region across the line and is thoroughly familiar with the northern portion of the Sierra Madre.

"The other man has been an outlaw, and is still an outlaw. He is a middle-aged man now, and he is in no danger of arrest for his past crimes, because it is generally thought that he is dead. In fact, a notice was published in the papers several years ago that he was killed in a border brawl. It was not true, for he is a ranchman now near Los Angeles and is quite prosperous. During the war he followed the fortunes of the noted Quantrell, and after peace had been declared was a member of Jesse James' gang of outlaws.

"Times became too hot for him back East after some train or bank robbery and he came West and was for years about the San Carlos reservation in some capacity or other. He was a great friend of the Apaches then and knew Kid well. In those years, too, he familiarized himself with the habits of the Indians in the upper mountains—the Whites and the Mongolians and all the surrounding country.

"To tell the truth, it was this outlaw who first enlisted me in the project. He was anxious for the reward. He hoped also to be able to come to life again, as it were, and hear his own name without danger of arrest. I think a successful issue of our expedition will result in giving him immunity from the law for his past offenses.

"We shall first locate our Indian. He is now in the Sierra Madre. The winter season will drive him down and he will come northward into the United States. There are several passes which he may come through—Lang's pass to Tupper's Battlefield, Guadalupe pass and others. After we have located him we shall determine upon the pass through which we think he will come. Then we shall lie in wait to take him. If we fail we shall go on farther north and wait in other passes.

"My outlaw is sure we can capture Kid, and were I not reasonably certain of success I should not enter upon the undertaking. We shall wait until winter before starting. Our campaign will open about the middle of December."

Who the outlaw of the Jesse James gang is to whom Marshal Gard refers is not known. Dave Poole, one of Quantrell's old lieutenants, is somewhere in Arizona. Charlie Ford is supposed to have committed suicide down there. Jim Cummins is supposed to be still alive, for the news of his death has never been published. The other members of the James gang are supposed to be either dead or in jail, with the notable exception of Frank James who is now in St. Louis.
